N. Y. Herald, 3d. Okra-Gumbo. Okra is a vegetable that is slow in finding its way to the garden and the table in the northern states, while in southern families it is in very general use. The plant is much like a large Hollyhock, with yellow flowers, which are succeeded by angled pods, six inches or more long, and over an inch thick. The pods, when so tender that they will break are years. when so tender that they will break, are very mucilaginous, and give off, when cooked, a large amount of gummy matter. If they begin to mature, they become woody, filled with hard round seeds, and quite unlike anything edible. Though in the getalogues the partie. edible. Though in the catalogues, the plant is called "Okra or Gumbo," the name Gumbo properly belongs to the dish prepared from the pods, rather than to the plant itse.f, as the southern cooks make Gumbo without the use of Okra, but substitute the pith and young leaves of sassafras, one of the native violets, and perhaps other plants. The best Gumbo is made with chicken, though veal and other meats are sometimes used, and is merely a stew made thick by the use of an abundance of Okra pods. Gumbo soup is any soup to which sufficient Okra is added to give it the desired thickness. The young and tender pods, boiled and dressed with melted butter, are liked by many, but they are rather too gummy for those not accustomed to them. A dish made of the Okra pods and tomatoes stewed together, is also prepared. One correspondent inquires if we know of any method of preserving Okra by canning. We have not known any attempts at canning the pods, but they are often dried; the pods of the proper age for cooking, are sliced, strung upon a cord, and dried in the same manner as fruit. They are also packed in salt, just as cucumbers are, and when wanted for use, are freshened in cold water .- [American Agriculturist.

A Skeleton In The Closet.

"BRANDON COYLE! ARE YOU MAD? She had stolen up behind him noiselessly she had snatched the loaded pistol from his desperate hand and hurled it through the open window into the bay below. And not one instant too soon to save him from the crime of self-destruction. He whirled around upon her, and they stood facing each other with eyes flaming defiance. How like, yet unlike, were these fierce, beau-cried, with a grown of anguish. "Because I would not have you destroy yourself for the sake of a peevish girl. Come. Brandon. Rouse yourself! Do be a man!" she exclaimed.

"I cannot live without Arielle!" he waited "What a mooncalf you are, to be crying after a girl! If you cannot live without her, then why don't you live with her?" scornfully

"She is to be married to morrow; but this is to-day; and 'there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and'-but proverbs are vulgar, and you know what I mean." "I do not!

I pray you: Hush, Brandon! Come and sit down here on the sofa by me, and I will tell you what to do to break off this marriage, near as it is, and to win the bride for yourself, much as she is now devoted to her affianced lover," whispered the girl, The suicidal phrenzy in him was laid for the moment, even though it might return.

"Now attend to me, Brandon. Before he became your successful rival in the favor of Lady Arielle Montjole, Valdimir Desparde was your most intimate friend, was he not?' "Of course he was," exclaimed Brandon, grinding his teeth.

You were in his entire confidence?" "Yes. "You have often heard him regret, deplore

"And we know all the rest from hearsay— how the bachelor, Lord Beaudevere, repre-sented these children to his neighbors as his little cousins and wards; how he sent Valdimir to Eton, and afterwards to Oxford, where the young man distinguished himself as much by devotion to study as by skill in athletic sports; how the guardian sent him on his continental tour, and at his return celebrated his majority at Cloudland, presenting him to the tenantry as the heir; how the baron procured the most accomplished governess and masters for Vivienne, and took her to London and had her presented to the Queen. All this we her presented to the Queen. All this we know of these two individuals, whose earliest

"Then if he is the heir of the Barony of eaudevere he must be so through his mother, for he cannot be so through his father, since the name of Desparde is not to be found in the Beaudevere genealogy," said Aspirita, sententiously.

"It is probably through his mother, whoever she was, since Beaudevere is one of those drew forth a folded newspaper, yellow and faded with age, and so worn all around its creases that it threatened to fall to pieces on being opened

"What is that?" demanded Brandon, reaching forth his hand. "Don't touch it yet. It is the New Orleans Courier of sixteen years ago. Uncle sent me up with his keys to open his secretary and fetch him some documents which he described to me. That was this morning, while the ballift was here. Well, I went up to his secretary in the library, and unlocked the upper drawer, but had hard work to pull it out. When I did so, by main strength, at last, I pulled it too far, and it fell with a crash—"

"For Heaven's sake, get on!" impatiently exclaimed Brandon. "And the jar, or something, touched or started the spring of a secret space at the back of the drawer that flew open and let this paper tumble out. There was nothing else in the hiding place but this paper. Oh! you will call it fate—its falling into my possession in this The young man eagerly seized the paper. He looked at the lines she had indicated until his gaze dilated into a stare, his cheeks grew pale, and his chin fell—aghast with hor-

"Ought not? He must not and shall not?
Oh: that Lord Beaudevere could have known this and kept it concealed "bitterly exclaimed Brandon.

"He did it in mercy to Valdimir and Vivienne. "But what sort of mercy, or even justice, has he shown in his dealings with Lord and Lady Altofaire, and Lady Arielle Montjoie? "Perhaps he thought this secret would never come out to injure them."

"And yet an old paper fortunately comes to light just in time to save the young lady from ruin and her family from dishonor. I will take this paper to the Earl of Altofaire this morning and lay the case before him!" 'No, no! Do not so!' "Why not ?"

"Because, if you do, the earl will stop the marriage, for Lady Arielle's sake, and then all Lady Arielle's sympathies will be with her betrothed lover, and she will remain faithful to him, and perhaps even elope with him!"

"That is true! What, then, would you advise me to do with this paper?"

"Take it to Valdimir Desparde! Remind him of his oft expressed desire to penetrate the mystery of his own early life, and of his constant wonder at his guardian's reserve on the subject. Then tell him that you have accidentally discovered the secret-that you feel in honor bound to reveal it to him. Then show him the paper.

"Oh, Asp! Asp what a serpent you are!" exclaimed Brandon Coyle, half in admiration. half in dread. "Stay," she murmured. "I hope that Valdi-mir does not suspect that you ever aspired to

We work together for our mutual interests. Behold all! "But, Aspirita, would you marry a man who did not think himself good enough for Lady Arielle Montjoie? A man in his excep-tional circumstances?" inquired Brandon Coyle, in surprise.

"Yes, I would. I am not Lady Arielle Montjoie. I am Aspirita Coyle, the orphan, dependent on my bachelor uncle, whose estates will all go to you. Besides, I love him," added the bold beauty, without a moment's hesi-

"Bravo, Asp! But oh! the fates forbid that ever your sting should strike me! "Go now, and execute your mission to Cloudland. It is time, unless you would prefer a dramatic probleding of the bans at the very altar to-morrow." said Aspirita, not a whit discomposed by the questionable compliments of her brother. "Can't forbid the bans, since there have been no bans! They are to be married by special license," said Brandon, almost gayly, so much was he elated by the prospect of preventing the marriage.

'They were to have been married, you mean! But they certainly are not to be now," amend-

"And, meanwhile, as the parties most con-cerned. they should be informed of their changed prospects," added Brandon Coyle, with a smile; and, rising, with a bow he left his sister, and, a few minutes later, departed on his detestable errand.

Aspirita Coyle looked after him, a great light of trium a cilating her dark eyes until they seemed the mouths of caverns leading down to the abyse of her darker soul, as she muttered to herself:

frowned man has given the coroner's office no ittle trouble. On the 31st ultimo the naked body of an unknown man was found in the East river at the foot of Grand street, and was removed to the Morgue. On Thursday Michael Stapleton, of 35 Monroe street, claimed the body as that of his son. He said that on July 28, about half-past 1 a.m., he had seen the deceased sitting on the back stoop of the front building, which was the last he had seen of his son alive. The following day he had made inquiries at the several station bouses, and last uesday night he identified the clothing which had been found on the dock at the foot of Market street as belonging to his son. He had heard of a body having been found on the preceding night in the East river at the foot of Jackson street, and another son went to the Morgue and identified the remains. This testimony to the mind of the coroner seemed conclusive as establishing the drowned man's identity, and he granted a permit for the removal of the body to 35 Monroe street; but yesterday Julius Welch, a German, appeared and claimed the body as that of his brother. As the first claimant stated that his son weighed weighed over two hundred pounds, and the body under dispute could not possibly reach that weight, Mr. Welch's claims seemed to be the most rational. The body, however, had been "waked" for two successive nights by Mr. Stapleton, considering the body that of his son, and when his right to the corpse was first questioned he became highly indignant. The ice, by mutual consent, was stripped from the body and then Mr. Stapleton became convinced that his son was a much larger man, and that he had identified the wrong body. Mr. Welch, on the other hand, was positive that the body was that of his brother, and after a hard struckly Mr. Strategies. after a hard struggle Mr. Stapleton consented to surrender the remains. Another difficulty. however, interposed as to who would defray the undertaker's expense, Mr. Stapleton protesting that he would not pay for waking the wrong corpse. Mr. Kennedy, the undertaker, also laid an embargo upon the body and decided to hold it in the state of the control o

IF IT WASN'T FASHIONABLE to go out of town in summer, not one-half of the people who indulge in that little extravagance would do so. They would refrain for several rea-sons. The first is because going away from home, even for a short season, is an expensive business; second, to people of domestic habits the pomp aud formalities of high toned summer resorts is exceedingly distasteful; and third, because those who have the means that enable them to leave the city during the hot months generally have more comforts and luxuries at home than they usually find at the haunts of summer revelry and dissipation. But, inen, Mrs. Grundy has so willed it, and who has courage enough to say nay to her imperious mandates. And really, the fashion of going away for a brief summer recreation has its advantages in the way of improved health, if people did not so often waste more vival
